Assembled about the pretty structure in the village of Jordanville was a large growd of people from the small towns and surrounding country who had come to see President Roosevelt. The news of his arrival had spread rapidly and the trolley line through Jordanville carried hundreds of people. A cheer went up as the carriage of the President drove up and Mr. Roosevelt alighted. The library is a pretty building, 50x100 feet, with large doric columns and steps extending across the entire width in front. In the centre is a large double doorway at the right of which is a bronze tablet bearing in raised letters the following:

"Expected in memory of Douglas Roh."

The inside is finished in Georgia pine The inside is finished in Georgia pine with bookcases on each side, and at the farther end a striking huge fire-place, with a beautiful wrought-iron fire set, given by Mrs. Cowles, a sister of the President and wife of Rear-Admiral W. S. Cowles. The auditorium is 20x40 feet, and is to be used also as a clubroom. A kitchen is provided at the rear for use in connection with social functions. The cost of the building was $5,000. There are 1.600 volumes of books at present in the library.

The exactises opening the library were held out of doors, awing to the small size of the auditorium. After the library had been presented to the people by Douglas Robinson, in a neat speech, Charles W. Crim, president of the Board of Trustees of the Jordan-ville Free Library, accepted it in behalf of the residents. The speech of the President followed, and Secretary Root and Mr. Sherman also spoke a few words. A reception at Henderson House, at which 500 guests were entertained, followed the coremonies at the library.

The men were employed by L. J. Cipperly. They had been delivering ice at the residence of George W. Widenmayer, on Mount Prospect avenue, and had just come out of the driveway when a southbound trolley the fine ran into them. Kerr, who was on the driver's seat, was thrown clear of the car by the impact, but the two other men, who were standing on the back step of the waron, fell off as the wagon swerved around and were rundewn by the car. There were cieven passengers on the car and all were shaken up. Edward Foye, the motorman, and Henry Meliser, the conductor, were placed under arrest.
